

MONEY

Money. It's nice to have.

What else could we possibly need to know about it?

Lots, argues course presenter Richard Glover, because the idea that money equates solely to wealth has been a driving force behind our current economic ills.

MONEY sets out a fuller picture of what money is, and how its power as a token of trust between holder and the community has within it the key to a more just, happy and healthy society.

Richard Glover is an active member of the School's Economic Faculty and has taken a keen interest in the true nature of money over the past few years, presenting talks and courses on this fascinating subject. He runs his own business as electronics consultant helping to bring new products to market.

This new course starts 5th November 2012 and runs for 5 consecutive Mondays at 7pm.

Venue: 11 Mandeville Place, London W1U 3AJ.

Prices: £65; concessions £50; full-time students £25.

Further details and booking: 020 7034 4000.
